

Attending the local school- Inclusion that's good for everyone

Presented by Dr Bob Jackson

Friday 1st March 2019

MACKAY

For children with disability, being included in your local school can provide a strong foundation for an inclusive life. Despite solid research evidence about the benefits of inclusive education for students with and without disability, there is confusion about what good inclusive education looks like in practice.

About the topic:

This workshop will provide the opportunity to learn from an experienced educator and academic about key features of inclusive education, based on research evidence, law and current policy.

It will cover:

- Building a vision for inclusion
- Including all learners in the same curriculum
- Fostering classroom and playground relationships to build belonging
- Whole class inclusive strategies and planning individualised supports
- Understanding "behaviour"
- Home-school partnerships and problem-solving

About the Presenter:

Dr Bob Jackson is the Managing Director of Include (WA) and has been working in the field of human services and education since the 1970s.

Bob has had a wide experience as a Direct Care worker, Psychologist, Manager of Disability Services, Researcher, Director of a Research Centre on Disability, Associate Professor of Education and consultant to government, private and public education systems, agencies and families.
