About the session:

We know that many people with disability are living lives that are more disconnected from family, friends and community than they would like. When people are seen as challenging they can be further isolated by people's perceptions and their own anxiety.

In this interactive workshop, Ann will present a range of planning and community inclusion approaches that she has found useful. While there are no magic solutions, this down to earth session will provide participants with practical examples and some strategies to assist people with disabilities, their families and services to work together to build the best life possible.

About the presenter:

Topics Will Include:

- Barriers to inclusion
- Flexibility & creativity
- The power of asking
- Finding 'sweet spots' of welcome

- The helpfulness of Roles
